Farmhouse finesse

This traditional kitchen is right at home in an old farmhouse on the Mornington Peninsula

This charming kitchen is far more fitting of its scenic setting than the stock-standard laminate kitchen that stood before it.

The team at Steding Interiors & Joinery understood the owners' desire to honour their home's history, while also making vast improvements to the way the space functioned.

The previous kitchen suffered from insufficient storage and poor planning, so Steding Interiors & Joinery got to work designing a kitchen with a user-friendly layout that incorporated the handcrafted finishes that are prevalent throughout the rest of the home.

Exposed hinges, large ogee mouldings and dove-tailed drawer boxes have been included in the design and enhance the kitchen's provincial appearance. Hand-painted finishes in cream add to the rustic feel with the lightly toned colour palette contributing to the kitchen's bright and airy atmosphere. Light also pours through the two newly installed windows positioned on either side of the oven cabinetry and canopy, highlighting the impeccable workmanship.

A dark, antique-brown granite island bench provides much-needed space for slicing and dicing. A massive chopping board with a handy push-out bin drawer underneath further assists the food preparation process.

Ornate sterling-silver knobs and swivel bails complete the space's traditional aesthetic.
